

Acknowledgments

The essays that make up this book began as contributions to a workshop we organised in October 2015 to reflect on the 40th anniversary of the publication of the Law and Poverty Report of the Poverty Commission in 1975. We were privileged to have Ronald Sackville AO QC, former Commissioner and primary author of the Report, to present his reflections on the contribution made by it to law reform. We thank the former Attorney-General of New South Wales, the Honourable Gabrielle Upton MP, for formally opening the workshop. Many others helped to bring the book to fruition. First, the workshop was made possible by a grant from the Faculty of Law of the University of New South Wales. It was also supported by the Australian Human Rights Centre (AHRCentre). Special thanks are due to Di McDonald, AHRCentre Manager, who provided much needed advice and assistance in the planning and organisation of the workshop. And we are very grateful to Natalie Vigliotta for administrative and catering services. We also benefited from the Faculty's generosity in providing the venue, and we thank our IT specialist, Chris Katselas, who ensured the smooth delivery of all the presentations, including a Skype presentation from Norway. In addition to all our presenters, who responded in a timely and attentive way to our many requests for drafts, amendments and edits, we would like to thank our commentators on the papers, Professor Prue Vines from UNSW Law, Associate Professor Thalia Anthony (University of Technology Sydney) and Gerard Thomas (Welfare Rights Centre).

Finally, we are indebted to The Federation Press for undertaking this project with us and, in particular, to Kathryn Fitzhenry and Jason Monaghan who have guided us through the various stages of the publication with delightful ease.
